Challenges of the non-traditional student

By Alvin Jones

Traditional college student refers to when a student goes straight from high-school into their college experience. While a non-traditional student is someone who takes a break before deciding if college is the correct decision. When deciding to go back to school after a break in your education the first obstacle is finding a school and completing the enrollment process. After a long break from school the ACT test can be challenging along with applying for grants and enrolling in classes there is a lot organize before your first day in class. Once the enrollment is complete navigation of a large campus is the next challenge compared to a high-school campus there is a much larger area with many more people. In more recent years there has been a shift from school work being done on paper to online. Even school materials and tutoring can be found online which is a considerable change from traditional schooling. With many things being different there as just as many the same like due dates, attendance, and homework. Finding the balance between school and personal life can be the key to making a non-traditional approach run smoothly. Keeping up on your work and in good communication with your teachers might be just as important. The bottom line is you can't do unless you try challenges aside the first step is deciding to look into your options regardless of when the last time you went to school.

How COVID-19 affects students

By Hayden Fuller

A lot of students have had a tough time switching from public high school to COVID college. A student named Isaac Ylitalo was a high-school graduate of 2020, meaning he's only known the life of going to college with COVID being an issue. One of the problems he's had, like many others, is adjusting to new classroom dynamics like being over zoom for the majority of classes or doing them online instead of being in the classroom with the teacher. This significant change makes it a lot harder to ask the professor questions in a timely and understandable manner depending on your internet connection. However, unlike many others, he hasn't run into the issues of meeting new people since he already has a tight-knit group of friends. He also doesn't have all that much time since he either works on schoolwork or pays it off. Yliato does go on to say that it has had a minor effect on his academic performance. He says that he has gone from trying to do his best in all classes to doing his best in all classes with the circumstances he's been put in. Like many others, understanding the material and asking questions to fix that problem is still a struggle in this newer environment for many people. He hopes that he can make his way through to graduate with his associates and then head to a bigger university to continue his education. He would like to eventually become an officer in the marines or be a part of law enforcement or, more specifically, a game warden.
